

What if the Devil Created Earth?

HorriFying Tales From The Dead II

by Drac von Stoller

Published: 2012

In the beginning, the Devil created Hell on Earth. The skies were red as fire, and the oceans and seas ran deep with blood. The Devil liked what he created, so he created a demon called Beelzebub, meaning "Prince of Demons" in his likeness and set him out into the world to enjoy the Hell that was created for him.

The Devil explained to Beelzebub, "Whatever you do don't eat the fruit from the Garden of Hell?"

Beelzebub asked, "Why master? It looks tasty."

The Devil explained, "If you do, you won't see the wonderful Hell that I have created for you. To make sure you don't eat of the tree, I have created Gargoyles to guard the tree so you won't be tempted to eat the fruit."

Everything was going well until Beelzebub was feeling lonely and wanted companionship. Beelzebub asked the Devil, "Is there any way you could create someone to keep me company while I enjoy this Hell you have created?"

"If this will make Hell better for you then so be it. I will make a female as your companion. I will name her Mania, which means Goddess of Hell. She will bare demon children for you both to bring up in this Hell I have created for you. Now go into Hell and have yourselves a Hell of a time," said the Devil.

Beelzebub and his new female companion ventured off into this new planet from Hell called Earth. Not long after Beelzebub and Mania were enjoying life on Hell's Earth, Mania convinced Beelzebub to eat from the forbidden tree, and when they did, they were ashamed at how grotesque they looked and went to hide in the lake of fire.

One of the Devil's Gargoyles was on his way to tell the Devil about what Beelzebub and Mania had done at the forbidden tree. When the Gargoyle told the Devil, the Devil let out a roar that echoed across the lake of fire. Beelzebub and Mania were frightened for their lives. The Devil spread out his wings and flew to the lake of fire to let Beelzebub and Mania know what the consequences were for disobeying their creator the Devil. The Devil swooped over the heads of Beelzebub and Mania's cursing them and telling them to get out of the lake of fire and face the consequences for disobeying their master. Beelzebub and Mania got their frightened bodies out of the lake of fire.

Beelzebub said, "Mania tricked me into eating the forbidden fruit from the tree. Please forgive me, master."

The Devil replied, "Shut your big fat mouth's and listen carefully to what I'm going to say or I'll set both of your asses on fire. Things will never be the same from this day forward, and the beautiful Hell that I created for you both will cease to exist. I am going to put you both into a deep sleep, and when you both wake up in seven days, the Hell on Earth you both once knew will not exist in your minds. Mania for what you have done, you will no longer be the Goddess of Hell and Beelzebub will no longer be the Prince of Demons. Mania, you will also bare demon children and be crippled for life. You both will be in great pain for the rest of your lives, and you will no longer be able to swim in the lake of fire. If you as much put your big toe in the lake of fire, your flesh will melt down to the bone. Hope you both have a great time in the new Hell on Earth I've created."

The Devil laughed and said, "You stupid fools, you both had it all and threw it all away over a piece of fruit from the forbidden tree that I told you both not to eat from."

The Devil flew off laughing and saying stupid fools, you silly fools and headed back to his palace while Mania and Beelzebub fend for themselves in the horror that awaits them both in their new Hell on Earth. Beelzebub and Mania set out into the Hell that the Devil had created for their unruly behavior. The Devil wasn't kidding around when he created the new Hell for them both. Mania and Beelzebub felt pain beyond their wildest dreams. Flesh-eating bugs were continually attacking them as their screams went unnoticed by any living creature that the Devil created for the new Hell on Earth.

Many months went by, and Mania brought forth their firstborn demon child. Mania said, "Let's name him Gaap meaning 'Prince of Hell.'"

"I like that name," said Beelzebub. When Gaap was about three years old, he wasn't delighted doing things alone while his father and mother were out overseeing that Hell on Earth that was running out of control.

One day while Gaap's mother was getting ready to venture out into Hell, Gaap tugged on his mother's dress and said, "Mother, can you and father give me a brother demon so we can play in this wonderful place called Hell?" Gaap's mother answered, "I think that would be a good idea. You will have a playmate to keep you company. I'll run it by your father when he gets home and sees what he thinks. Now whatever you do, don't you go swimming in the lake of fire and when you get up the next morning, your father and I will give you the news."

Morning came. Gaap was excited to hear the news, and it was just what he asked. Gaap's father Beelzebub said, "Son, we will give you a demon brother so you'll have someone to play with and explore this wonderful Hell that was created for us all."

Many more months later, Gaap's mother Mania gave birth to a boy demon child and named him Cresil, meaning "Demon of impurity and laziness." Everything was going well for a few months with Cresil and Gaap playing together until Cresil started losing interest in his brother Gaap's companionship and the fact that Cresil was getting more attention from his mother and father than Gaap was getting. Seeing that Gaap was no longer the favorite of his parents just sent Gaap into a jealous rage. Gaap decided he would persuade his brother Cresil into coming to the forbidden lake of fire. Cresil went along with his brother's wishes and joined him one more time to see the lake of fire. It seemed as though they were having the time of their lives playing by the lake of fire, but Gaap was waiting for the right opportunity to catch his brother off guard and when he did, he would push him into the lake of fire.

Everything went just the way Gaap hoped it would. He pushed his brother into the lake of fire and watched in horror as the flesh melted off his body. Gaap was so excited to have his brother out of the way so his parents would spend more time with him, but when one of the Gargoyles happened to be flying by the lake of fire and see what Gaap was doing to his brother Cresil, the Gargoyle reported back to Gaap's parents what he had witnessed. Gaap's parents were furious and heartbroken that one brother killed the other brother over jealousy. Gaap's parents sent Gaap to the lake of fire, where he killed his brother Cresil, to be tied to a tree next to the lake of fire for seven days with little food or water, in hopes he would learn a lesson from the evil deed he committed.

Gaap learned his lesson alright when his father released his demon son from the tree by the lake of fire. Gaap was so overwhelmed with guilt that he immediately broke free from his father's grasp and headed straight for the lake of fire, saying "Cresil, I'm coming to join you. Jealousy got the best of me. Now I must pay for my brother's death." It was too late for Gaap's father Beelzebub to stop Gaap from ascending into the lake of fire.

Beelzebub cursed at the Devil for taking his two sons from him so early in life. The Devil's response to what Beelzebub said was, "I can hear you loud and clear Beelzebub. My advice to you is, shut your damn mouth before I shut it for you. I'm not the one who disobeyed my commands. You had a beautiful Hell on Earth, but you and Mania decided to disobey me so now that the Hell you once knew is gone, you want to blame me. I should take you and Mania and throw you both in the lake of fire. If I find out you and Mania, are planning to seek revenge against me, you will both be thrown in the lake of fire to join your two son's Gaap and Cresil."

Beelzebub said, "Okay! Satan, I'll do as you say."

"Good idea, Beelzebub. Let's hope we never have this conversation again. If we do, you know what will happen to you both," said the Devil.

As the months passed by like the wind, Beelzebub and Mania were missing their two sons, Gaap and Cresil, terribly. Their feelings for revenge for what the Devil did to their two sons were too strong to ignore, so they tried their best to come up with a plan to defeat the Devil. After several failed attempts by Beelzebub and Mania to seek revenge on the Devil, the Devil decided it was time to send Beelzebub and Mania to the lake of fire to join their two sons Gaap and Cresil.

The Devil sent his two strongest Gargoyles to bring Beelzebub and Mania to the lake of fire to receive their punishment from the Devil. The Gargoyles burst into Beelzebub and Mania's hut they lived in and whisked them off to the lake of fire to accept their death sentence, in front of the Devil. The Devil said to Beelzebub and Mania, "For what you've done to disgrace what Hell and I stand for, I am casting you both into the lake of fire to join your two son's Gaap and Cresil."

Beelzebub and Mania were picked up by the two Gargoyles that brought them to the lake of fire and flown above the lake of fire, waiting for the Devil to tell the Gargoyles to release them into the lake of fire. Mania was screaming, and Beelzebub was cursing at the Devil to spare their lives, but the Devil doesn't spare lives. The Devil said, "I've heard enough. Release these pathetic demons into the lake of fire." The Gargoyles released Beelzebub and Mania into the lake of fire to join their two sons.

After the Devil did his duty, he said to the two Gargoyles, "This creation stuff is for the birds." The Devil also said, "I'm through with this place called Hell on Earth. God, if you think you can do better with this creation stuff, then this planet is yours." God said, "Devil, I don't know why you thought you could do a better job with creation than I. You failed on two attempts. I may fail once, but only once. So, Devil, I cast you out from this Earth. Now go on your way and leave the creation process to me." The Devil left the Earth, and God created Man and Woman. The rest is history.

